PROJECT SUMMARY

The CORE Business Interiors showroom and offices are located on the northeast corner of Ingram and Fallbrook in Fresno, California. The company looked to expand from its Clovis location before coming across the available space at a prominent intersection that formerly housed Johnsey Insurance. The interior of this location had been partitioned by sheetrock walls which separated the dark inner offices from the sun-lit perimeter rooms. The lack of natural lighting paired with the restraints of low-hanging ceilings created a challenge as the CORE team assessed how the space could be redesigned to showcase both raised flooring and modular wall products. By replacing many of the thick interior walls with translucent glass, and reworking the air conditioning, CORE was able to cultivate the open and inviting environment it exhibits today.

PROJECT PROFILE

The CORE design team creatively renovated the interior of the office. They began by having the duct system reworked and leaving a portion of the ceiling exposed. These changes allowed for other ceiling areas to be raised, which increased light flow indoors. With the addition of modular glass walls and raised flooring, as well as many signature furnishings, the interior transformed into the contemporary, open and forward-thinking space that provides a unique glimpse into the future of office construction and captures the essence of CORE.
